A conservative exposition of the book of Revelation by a minister of the Church of Christ. Unique to this commentary is the proposition that the future of the church is seen by John in a series of seven synchronous visions, each beginning at some point in the church's history and each ending with a vision of the end of time. Certain code phrases alert the reader when a new vision is beginning. This commentary follows in the main the continuous historical approach, which posits that the events portrayed in the symbols are real, historical events beginning around AD 100 and ending at the return of Christ.
