Soul mates at the age of 18, it sounds to good to be true, but not for Max and Mary. They had dated for the past three years and were in the middle of their senior year. With plans of college and graduation plaguing their thoughts, nothing would put a damper in their plans of spending the rest of their lives together. They live in a small town outside of Hollywood California where nothing to exciting ever seems to happen. So when a new bookstore opens in town, they decide to check it out. Mary is drawn to the back section on witchcraft and spells and the bubbly blonde owner leaves a lasting impression on her.

When a tragic night changes their futures forever, how far would Mary go to make things as they were before? Would a visit to the bookstore that drew Mary's attention prove to be vital in her future with Max. What would you do for pure happiness?

Undo, A Love Story of Toil and Trouble is the first fictional novel completed and released by Crystal Wren.

Opening excerpt:

Mary looked around. The air was still and the only sound she could hear was that of her heart beating in her chest. Her hands shook and she griped them together in an attempt to subdue them. The night was dark; it had to be close to 10:30 or 11:00 so it wasn't eerily late, but late enough that no one should be around. For some reason the tool shed hadn't been locked and she was able to sneak in and take a shovel. She was grateful since she had forgotten the small camp shovel in her room, but the larger shovel would provide a much quicker service. She plunged it into the mound of fresh earth and dug. It felt like she was digging for hours, but in reality it had only been about 15 minutes or so. The burial had happened that morning so the ground was still soft. The shovel struck the top of the casket and made a clanging sound. She was surprised since she had assumed it was wooden and would make a thump. She looked around to make sure no one had heard the commotion and when she confirmed she was alone, she fell to her knees in exhaustion and let out a sigh. The sigh was not in relief, but in anticipation. She knew there was no turning back and she would have to finish what she had set out to do from the moment she walked into the book store and purchased the book that ached for her to take it home.
