I want you to think of an airport. Under the gleaming fluorescent light, you stand by the luggage carousel waiting for yours to circulate. Rotating in the carousel, you let your baggage pass by one more time, and it goes around and around, again and again. You take in a deep breath, as that ugly backpack comes to you once more. But this time you don't let it go around again. This time, you pick up your baggage, and you claim it. In our anthology, we will lay claim to the things that threaten to drag us down. We will use our pain, those regrets, those broken promises—our emotional baggage—to ultimately make something beautiful. Our art.
