Journal of a Residence on a Georgian Plantation in 1838-1839

This book is a series of letters the English author is writing to a friend during her stay in the south on a plantation in the 1830's. The author is against slavery in principle before she ever arrives. Her experiences on the plantation and those she hears from various slaves residing there, of which she gives accounts, are extremely heart-wrenching. The author a few times mentions the law of a Black person not being able to testify against any White person. As a White woman, she gives an eye-witness account of the atrocities of slavery lest any of the narratives of former slaves be dismissed and consider fabrications and exaggerations. somewhat refreshing and at any rate makes her observations and opinions the more remarkable. She detested the slaves accepting the notion of their inferiority. She makes really good points and illustrates them very well, especially her discussing the Irish immigrants relationship to the slaves or Blacks in general.
