Dragoon I - The Story of Prince Eugene of Savoy John Dickson

As the tumultuous 17th century drew to a close the Protestant nations of northern Europe co-existed uneasily with Catholic nations to the south, none wanting a repeat of the devastating Thirty Years War. Instead a threat to all Christendom, the Turkish Empire re-asserted itself in the east. Only two hundred and thirty years after the Turks had surged out of Anatolia and captured Constantinople they had conquered the Balkans and much of Hungary. In 1683 they threatened Vienna, seat of the Holy Roman Emperor.

In 1683 a tiny, malformed French prince and a young English puritan, both disinherited and disgraced at home, answer Pope Innocent's call for Christendom to unite in crusade to repel the massive Turkish army besieging Vienna, gateway to Western Europe.

Over the next fifty years Prince Eugene of Savoy frustrates the ambitions of both Sun King and Sultan to bring Europe under their dominion. Adam Palmer is his comrade-in-arms in some of the seminal campaigns and battles that formed Europe as we know it. Against the Turks; Vienna, Belgrade, Zenta, Sarajevo and unique in military history, in co-command with the Duke of Marlborough against the French; Blenheim, Oudenaarde, Malplaquet and separately; Turin and Toulon.

Who was the greater commander, Eugene or Marlborough? Napoleon, who studied both, was in no doubt. Was Eugene homosexual? Austrians, for whom Prince Eugene is their greatest military hero, deny it as do the Germans of Frederick the Great. Was Eugene a son of Louis XIV? Was Louis himself a son of Cardinal Mazarin, successor to Richelieu? Read this two volume biographical novel and judge for yourself.
