This curriculum series reflects the collective experience of Eden faculty during the past 30 years of providing comprehensive, individualized services for children and adults with autism. Employing a hands-on approach, the series includes practical strategies with every teaching program provided, and each program has been successfully implemented in the lives of individuals and families served by Eden.

Many educators are familiar with using task-analyzed programs to teach individuals with autism spectrum disorders a range of skills in a variety of domains. Physical education, recreation and leisure skills, however, are often not approached in the same manner. This curriculum was developed to address this frequently overlooked area, with the goal that these programs will be included into comprehensive, well-rounded curricula that promotes skill acquisition in all domains.

Skill development in the area of physical education, recreation and leisure can positively impact the overall development of students with autism spectrum disorders by providing opportunities for potential social interaction with peers. When a student is being integrated with typical peers and academic opportunities are not appropriate, physical education, recreation and leisure activities are often chosen due to their seemingly less challenging nature. For social development to be enhanced, students with autism spectrum disorders must have a repertoire of physical education, recreation and leisure skills to be successful in such situations.
